	I Met a Martian and Other Stories Martian tales from the best writers around, aged from 10 to 100, collected in celebration of the Sydney Story Factory – includes stories by Nick Earls, William McInnes, Debra Adelaide and Sydney Story Factory students.	$20.00		$
	Invasion Sunscreen Martian skin needs protection. And on Earth, which is one planet closer to the sun and where the ozone layer is non-existent (thanks to typical human stupidity) alien skin needs to top up its natural protector. No amount of slimy mucus will do. Just rub on some of this factor 5000+ sunscreen. Actually, it's slime.	$8.00		$
	Emergency Space Food Travelling on spacecraft can take light years. Keep your various stomachs full with these intergalactic snacks – designed by the most recent winners of Martian Masterchef. Actually, it's freeze-dried Neapolitan icecream.	$10.00		$
	Puny Humans Enjoy the thrill of playing with toy earthlings. These 10 tiny plastic people are colourful and bright (unlike most humans, it must be said.) Martian young broaden their enormous minds by imagining what being another lifeform is like. Mostly, they end up eating them. Not recommended for those with weak stomachs.	$8.00		$
	Breath Fresheners Suck on one or two of these fiendishly fresh fishy things – known as 'sardines' on Earth – and your breath will be ready for all types of social Martian activities. Suitable for public speaking, intergalactic discourse and first dates.	$5.00		$

	Black Hole Own your very own plot of spacetime, from which no light can emanate or escape. Not only do black holes exist, they make excellent cup holders or tablecloths. In this case, a nice round black tablecloth.	$12.00		$
	Human Disguise Be the life and soul of the cosmos with this laugh-a-minute Earth-dweller disguise kit. Modelled on a real human being, this semi-life-like facial technology can transform any alien body into Martian Scorsese.	$8.00		$
	Martian Incubator Here's your chance to prove there is life on Mars. Tend carefully to your Martian – stuffed full of grass seeds – and it will grow a fine head of hair/grass. It'll be enough to make any old sod a bit jealous.	$8.00		$
	Space Jam Spread it on anything - animal, vegetable or mineral. It tastes great on anything from bits of old satellites to burnt up space junk. Earthlings know it as 'raspberry jam'.	$9.00		$
	Bite-Size Oxygen Mars is a breathtaking planet. For Earthlings, we mean this quite literally. Our atmosphere features only traces of oxygen (not the 20% Earth bods are used to). When Martians travel to other planets, these portable miniature parcels of Martian-style O2 keep us bubbly. Earthlings refer to it as "bubble wrap."	$4.00		$
	Intelligent Life Forms The silt deposits of our Aurorae Sinus sea are not to be sniffed at. They are home to billions of intelligent creatures called Sea Monkeys. Locals like to take a large metal dish and go panning for them – in a hobby we call marsipanning.	$8.00		$

	Really Lonely Planet Guide Your unique guide to everything on Mars: places to stay, things to do, and tips on how to politely react to Martian slime. They're proud of it, you know!	$5.00		$
	Space Travel Sickness Pills Interplanetary travel across galaxies can cause vomiting fits. Particularly if your spaceship hits a turbulent black hole that hasn't been filled by the Council. These anti-projectile vomit pills (aka jelly beans) not only calm a nervy stomach – they reduce dry cleaning bills too.	$6.00		$
	Flying Saucer Repair Kit Assorted bolts and screws. There's nothing worse than being Lost in Space. But this handy tool kit can get any space ship back into orbit. It includes an assortment of metallic screws, nuts, bolts and bungs. We say handy, but obviously it can just as easily be used by space dwellers with claws, tentacles or suckers as opposed to hands. Well, perhaps not suckers.	$8.00		$
	The Martian Empire Poster Poster of the Martian Empire. How have you gotten by without one?	$25.00		$
	Crop Circle Starter Kit For centuries, humans have tried to get their heads around crop circles. Now we can let you in on our little secret. It's just Martian kids tagging stuff. This simple starter kit not only explains how to create a suitably irreverent message in a wheat field, but lets you experiment in the comfort of your own home. Seeds and instruction booklet included.	$12.00		$
	Martian Cape (budget) Temperatures on Mars vary from about -87°C in winter to -5° C in summer – a bit like New Zealand only colder. To stay toasty, you'll want a patented portable reflective Martian Cape – to keep the warm in and the cold out. It also works well in a dust storm. But be warned, this budget silver one – a lot like a space blanket – doesn't really work.	$8.00		$

	Martian Cape (deluxe) Temperatures on Mars vary from about -87°C in winter to -5° C in summer – a bit like New Zealand only colder. To stay toasty, you'll want a red velvet Martian Cape to keep the warm in and the cold out. It also doubles nicely as a space superhero costume – if you still believe in such things.	$30.00		$
	Gravity (small or big) Surface gravity on Mars is approx. 38.3971884% of that on Earth. Which is good news for hippos, bad news for ballerinas. Just in case you suddenly feel light-headed, pop this emergency gravity into your pocket, and keep your feet on the ground. NB This can is empty.	$6.00/ $8.00 Please circle or note the size.		$
	Martian Money Mars has a very powerful economy. We were immune to the GFC, and even the UFC. While you can use Australian dollars on the planet, the rate of exchange is so abysmal that it's wiser to bring Martian currency. This pack includes change, so you can slip M$10 into the doorman's tentacle when you check into your hotel.	$8.00		$
	Invasion Kit Amuse your friends with this pretend invasion kit – a ray gun and a flag. Because they are probably human and therefore quite stupid, they will think you are a real alien from Mars invading their lounge room. Believe us – the real thing is a million times scarier.	$18.00		$
	Abduction Kit In our quest to find intelligent life in the universe, MASA seeks out and removes living samples from other planets. (We have come to realise nothing comes close to our IQ levels.) Now you can simulate the removal of Earth's most intelligent lifeforms with this abduction-training module. Battery hens not included. Small plastic farm animals included.	$14.00		$
	Genuine* Martian Rocks If travelling to the Red Planet is a bit out of your price range, have no fear. You can experience a little of what it's like to be on Mars right here on Earth. These are real Martian rocks, taken from the banks of the Arsia Mons volcano. Stick them to the soles of your shoes, and feel like you're walking around on Mars all day long. *Not genuine.	$6.00		$

	Melted Ice The essential purity of our Martian polar ice caps has been captured and preserved in liquid form. Okay, okay. It's water in a plastic beaker. But hey, you can still impress your friends with the fact that you are drinking something that's almost identical to our superior Martian water. Almost.	$5.00		$
	Alien Virus Survival Kit It's difficult for Martians arriving on Earth. Not only are you stared at, but it's not uncommon to get flu-like symptoms from the change in climate. These simple precautions can help avoid viral or bacterial infection. They can also reduce the amount of green gooey fluid dribbling over your face to a normal level.	$7.00		$
	Pet Egg After decades of research by MASA, Martians scientists have hatched this simple plan to create a lifeform from scratch. Just add water, and your very own alien will spring into existence. Be warned that it will have a life of its own. And may not respond to human voices.	$6.00		$

This miniature flute – inaudible to humankind, and coincidentally just like a dog whistle – allows Mars dwellers to call for friendly assistance. With practice, it is possible to create a unique melody.	$8.00		$
